GAIL HAMILTON'S CHAPTER XVI.

OFFICE HOLDERS AND POLITICS.

A RULE THAT DOES NOT WORK BOTH WAYS.

CARL SCHURZ AND POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

His Pockets Open for Office-holders' Money.

EXCLUSION OF OFFICE-HOLDERS FROM POLITICAL ASSOCIATIONS—ENFORCED ORDER PLAINLY UNLAWFUL—SINGULAR TEST OF FITNESS FOR OFFICE—MR. SCHURZ'S PROOF FOR SPEECH-MAKING—THE CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

To the Editor of the Tribune.

SIR: President Hayes has lately taken a very pronounced step towards the enforcement of what he regards as reform in the Civil Service. He forbids any officer of the Federal Government "taking part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns." He forbids any assessment to be made for political purposes on Federal office-holders. The penalty for exerting any political influence is peremptory dismissal from office.

This is not the first time that measures of this sort have been attempted, but I believe their success lies in the future. It is a gardener of the sling at hold it has taken upon the American mind, that this order is to-day considered as novel, and as much an innovation as if it had not been made nearly forty years ago by Daniel Webster when he was secretary of State under President Harrison, an order which he enforced himself ten years later, when holding the same position under President Filmore, by visiting with his severest displeasure all Whigs who refused to subscribe to the compromise measures of 1850. That as Mr. Webster aimed to secure the complete independence of the office-holders by making them support a policy against which their conscience protested and their manhood rebelled, shall history again repeat itself? I cannot see that the acceptance and adoption of this principle would be creditable to the character or profitable to the interests of the American people.

It would be an unmitigated and unmitigated evil and scandal that every man appointed to Federal office should feel himself obliged to swear the oath of loyalty and political duplicity of the Administration appointing him. No position can be more humiliating than this, unless it be the attitude of absolute inaction and neutrality when this order prescribes for the office-holder. Why is it not just as offensive, degrading and humiliating to tell a man he holds office on condition that he abstain from politics, as that he holds it on condition that he take an active and zealy part in politics? Large business firms are sometimes accused of intimidating their employees, political action of their employees, but I never heard such attempts pointed out for emulation; it is always for a shame. The Democratic head of a manufactory who should undertake to tell his men what meetings they should or should not attend out of business hours would be held up to Republican execration. I do not see why the President in anything more to do with the manner in which office-holders spend their time out-side of business hours than the head of any other business firm. It is true that he, like the dry-goods merchant or the ordinary housekeeper, engages the whole time of his servants, and in an emergency, like them, he commands their whole time. But it is also true that nature, requires and custom prescribes only a certain routine of duty within a limited and set time, and outside of that the man belongs to himself alone. The President, like any other master, has the legal power to dismiss a man for any cause whatever; but has he the moral right to dismiss him for anything but neglect of his official duty? especially for doing what every American citizen has been taught to consider one of his dest patriotic duties? If politics are to be divorced from the Civil Service, what has the President to do with a man's political bias, provided he does thoroughly the Civil Service he was hired to do? For years it has been dinned into our ears that every good citizen should attend primaries and see to it that only good men are put in nomination. Does the office-holder cease to be a citizen? Has he no duties to perform in the way of selecting good men and rejecting bad men? Has he no interest in the integrity and ability of any office but his own?

Indeed, the case is far stronger than I have put it. The President, unlike the head of a business firm is, with every other office holder down to the foot of the ladder, himself a servant. A man who absolutely owns a factory has the right to prescribe the terms on which men may work in it; but the President has no such right with officers of the Federal Government, who are but his fellow-servants. The law, which is above President and Department Clerks alike—the law which is the voice of the people in organic, concrete form, is alone able to do this. I utterly deny that the President has any right to prescribe or prohibit, outside the requirements of the law, which he is to execute, not to make the law. One of the grandest and best of the old Revolutionary declarations in New England was that the colonists made their resistance "to the end that we may have a Government of laws, and not of Government of men." I maintain that the order of President Hayes is directly in the teeth of the letter, and still more of the spirit of that declaration. The President is indeed clothed by the Constitution with the power of appointment, and inferentially, with the power of removal, but this great power is to be exercised with discretion as well as with conscientious fidelity; and here, in this very power, lies the beginning, if not the ending of Civil Service Reform. Give us good appointments for all offices, and Civil Service Reform is in a fair way to become an accomplished fact. But if this great power of removal is to hang on any arbitrary thread whatever, if it is to be held over the heads of office-holders with the threat from the White House that it shall fall on any one who exercises a right and performs a duty common to all American citizens, it seem to me an abuse which puts the President into the position of an absolute monarch, and clothes him with the power of laying upon persons holding office conditions not required by law, in conflict with their rights as citizens. Inquatory to their independence as men.

When a man enters office, he takes a certain prescribed oath as to his loyalty, his obedience to the constitution and laws of the United States, his solemn promise to perform his duties well and faithfully, and if the office involves care of public money and other property, a bond is always given as additional security to the Government. If the man be unfaithful in any one of these respects, it is the solemn duty of the President, charged as he is with the execution of the laws, to remove him. But I say again, and apparently it cannot be said too often, that the President has no more right than Mr. Hayes of Ohio to add a condition not required by law, no more right than he has to abrogate one that is required by law. If he believes that additional requirements should be made, or additional prohibitions laid upon office-holders, it is his duty to recommend a law to that effect when he communicates with Congress. If Congress be antagonistic or apathetic the only thing that remains is to labor with the people till they elect a Congress that is eager and active. But to make the law of his own motion is, to say thinking, a gross, arrogant and dangerous assumption of power, which, however much it may be applauded by the chapters of the press, will, in the end, be severely condemned by the sober judgment of the people.

But the office-holder gets such a hold on the machine that it cannot be loosed, and he rules rough-shod over the people's will, says the Reformer.

Let me assure the Reformer, who stands haughtily eyeing the machine, and whose fingers are restlessly working in his long-bag to clutch it, that it would be more nearly in line to go to work the manly way and get the machine into his hands by superior strength, then to stand whining to the President to take the other boy's hands off! Take them off yourself like a man. We the people are not so effeminate that we should fear to be enslaved by thrice the number of office-holders. You blessed little knot, Gen. Butler, if you are to be believed, rode as pretty hard in the Essex District, but when the people had once made up their minds, out he went—office-holders and all!

Is it ingenuous to think that the Reformers are seeking to get the machine into their own hands rather than to destroy the machine? Why they say it themselves. Is not a Reformer to be believed even when he speaks the truth? They are so eager that all the motives of prudence cannot restrain them, but they are continually popping up their heads too soon for success. Unfortunately, says one office-holder, "Reform is playing far more with the Administration than it has yet thrown its fruits in Pennsylvania. Cameron's satellites are still in office all over the state, and there is therefore no encouragement for the real Reform element in the party to come forward and pull the machine men out of the control of the organization. The Cameron men mean to let the election go by default." Wait a moment, Hayes-lides. Why do you wish to pull the machine men out of the control? You admit that they will let the election go by default. That is they will take the handle off the machine and let it spin around till it runs down. That is they will simply do nothing which is precisely what the President orders them to do! If they were Civil Service Reformers born and bred, they could do no more. Not a word is uttered against them in the performance of their official duties; it is only that they will let the election go by default. And now the President, instead of saying Well done, good and faithful servants, is informed that the only way to convert the Republican party in Pennsylvania from defeat is for him to speedily put his reform theories into practice, and make a succession of first-class appointments to the Federal offices in that State!

What has the President to do with saving the Republican party in Pennsylvania? I believe the election go by default a reason for the removal of an office-holder who is credited to have nothing to do with politics.

The Chicago Tribune breathes out fierce threatenings and slaughter, far more like the old battle cry of patronage than like the young Melancthon of Reform.

"It is believed the Cameron men intend to punish the President . . . by ordering their office-holding henchmen to let the election go by default, or to take such a course as will result in the Democrats carrying it. Hold Simon and young Don play a game of this sort on the Republican party it will be the boundless duty of the President and Cabinet to remove from office every treacherous Cameronian in the State who contributes to such result, and to fill their places with a different class of men. This will teach them that honesty is the best policy, even in politics."

We, who are yet in the gall of partisan bitterness and the bonds of political iniquity need a special Divine Revelation to explain how it is going to teach this. The Reformers do not accuse the "henchmen" of carrying him with his gainsay prayer, except carrying him with his granted prayer. The President orders them out of politics, and out they go, and therefore it is the President's boundden duty to remove them from office also! The different class of men he is to put in is of course men who will not let the election go by default, and who will save the Republican party in Pennsylvania.

Again an Alabama gentleman who expresses forcibly the sentiments of the best class of Southern Republicans" addresses the President: "To be true to your policy of pacification and reform, you must be true to the friends of that policy. The retention in office of those who are indifferent to the success of your policy is an absolute impediment to its success by reason of fidelity to it, or want of acceptability to the people, can result only in its failure."

But if politics are to be absolutely divorced from office, what have the opinions of a Customs Clerk regarding a national policy to do with adding up figures on his desk?

"A season as Secretary Sherman returns from his Northern trip the question of suspending Collectors Arthur of New York and Tutton of Philadelphia will be brought before the Cabinet for consideration." Both of these collectors then were of course found guilty of malfeasance in office by the Investigating Committees. On the contrary, so late as June 4 "an impression seemed to prevail among officials at the Treasury Department that Collector Tutton of Philadelphia has been successful in instituting many reforms thus far during his administration." Even "this predecessor was an honest, and in many respects efficient officer, but lacked that experience and tact in the transaction of public business which Mr. Tutton has brought to the position." Collector Arthur, so far from being censured by his inquisitors was deputed to form the committees which were to carry out their suggestions. Reform, tact, experience—why, then are these officials to be suspended? Oh! "some members of the Cabinet are of opinion that these officials are not in sympathy with the President's Civil Service Rules, and that they ought to be displaced by men active and hearty accord with the administration on this point."

So, after all, the "felt want" of this shrinking, sensitive Administration is "sympathy." The final "fitness" for office is elective affinity. It is not enough that a man have honesty, ability, tact and experience, the competitive examination must ask him, in the exhorters asked to ask the "convicted" Jim the old-fashioned country revivalist, "how do you feel in your mind?" The Administration can call into its closest counsels a man who fought against the country, and voted against the party; harmony in little matters like State Sovereignty is not essential; but unless one heartily and actively sympathizes the spectacle of an Administration turning out a faithful and capable clerk, because his brother, or his brother-in-law, or his cousin happens to be a faithful and capable clerk, he shall not so much as speak over a Custom House. By all means, let us have "sympathy." Secretary Schurz advocates the suspension of both officials, on the ground that they represent the bad element in politics. . . . Mr. Schurz believes that the man who ridicule the President's rule are not the right persons to make it a success."

In the competitive examinations which are to determine fitness for office, will Mr. Schurz tell us what is to be the standard of the badness or the element which the competitor represents, and of the degree in which he represents it? We can easily tell whether a man knows the multiplication table, the German dynasties, the genealogies of David, but how shall we find out whether he represents the good or the bad element in politics? "Political!" It is thoroughly mentioned by Mr. Schurz in this dispatch. Naughty collectors. Have they been laughing at Mr. Schurz? Have they been mocking each other? Do they have a sudden coughing-fit when the good Secretary comes in? Away with them! These are solemn times. What is there to laugh about, especially now that the Rules have decided to have it out with your wife's father, but not to hunt for nepotism under the bones of your great-grandfather? No! Let Mr. Arthur and Mr. Tutton instantly and permanently smooth down their faces, or go forth into the world, not with Mr. Charles Francis Adams' "stamp of treason upon their brows," because that has taken to every civilized place, but bearing the "mark Ill Humoris Rid!"

And when, hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow, they take their solitary way from the Receipt of Customs, if still Mr. Schurz hear through the Saturn's sadness

The general design of the ceiling is done in bold relief work, the centre panel of the ground work is a delicate lavender tint, and the sides and borders are drab and gray. The centre-pieces and ornaments are elaborate and of a systematic architectural design done in gray The background to the ornaments is of brown Outside of the main panel is a Grecian border, finished to the cornice in panels; the cornice is handsomely decorated with leaves in relief The walls are painted in panels with the same tints that are in the ceiling, over the windows are arches with brackets painted in relief, and below the windows the wall is painted in oils and in panels. Back of the pulpit are three arched panels with heavy mouldings. The whole is in harmony with the architecture of the church, and the colors, lovely nicely in the daytime, and light up easily. The work has been very skilfully executed, and greatly admired by all who have seen it

PICKING BERRIES

We were out the hills on a rainy day alone,
You never saw such a dreary weather —
Such showers, such pelting showers, such chilling winds,
When we would hurry together.

We robbed the green vines of their store,
Which, all our baskets, scratched our fingers,
We did not mind, we gathered more —
How over that day my memory lingers!

My hands were dyed with the juice
Of the ripe, I the vines to fill her basket,
And then—the almost perfect bliss —
Was stole my heart, my child of the rain!

So charming Fanny stood that day,
And the skies, I yet behold her,
With her hale cheek the winds at play,
Her curl dropped backward over her shoulder.

The brambles, too, her beauty see,
As I clasp her in their embraces
Who could say she to set free
Scratched are her hands, and torn her dress.

Then I became exhausted, I —
Not in the hurry, oh, no, not even —
But caught with laughing eyes of blue,
To be her prisoner, slave forever.

She gives one look, I hear no force,
I capitulate from me with nancy laughter,
Then clasp her fairy waist,
And we come home together.

My heart with love so kept are it,
Forever warm mouth with kisses —
Darling, pick a day like that,
It you would know what perfect bliss is.

Oh, the air like trees and glowing skies
We were cheered in that summer weather,
We knew a Eden to paradise
In through the berry field together.
